Adding a class to a node using jQuery I have a set of audio players on a page. Each audio player has the same class of .play-audio. How would I change the visibility of each audio player based on the current class of the element? I know you can set the visibility through CSS, but not sure if I can do this with jQuery. A: I'm not 100% sure this will work since it's not fully explained, but what you can do is use .find or a child selector to get your elements. In this example, I'm getting all elements that has the class .play-audio which are elements that's inside an element with class .container: $(document).ready(function() { $('container.play-audio').each(function() { $(this).css('display', 'none'); }); }); But of course if you're using them for manipulation, .css would be the better way to go.
